I always wonder why so many people like the color blue 🙄. It might seem like a silly topic, but it's interesting to explore. Among the people around me, if you take a group of ten, at least half will say they like blue. To be honest, I only liked blue because most people around me did. But when I separated from them, blue became my least favorite color. Believe it or not, I've noticed that people who like blue don't get close to me. It might sound foolish, but I feel that whenever I try to get close to them, it doesn't work out, and if they try, I feel distant. It seems like circumstances always keep us apart. This isn't just with specific people but with everyone, from family to friends, and even strangers.

I often wonder if there's no other color for people to like. Don't say black ❤️ – is that even a color? I remember Pradee once saying, "People who like black don't understand the definition of color, 🤔" which made me laugh and think of Arnold Anna. Sure, people might find black elegant, but they miss out on other beautiful colors. This doesn't mean everyone should like yellow, which is my favorite. Yellow is my soulful color, but I don't like wearing it because it looks too flashy. Although I love yellow 🟡, I enjoy other colors too. Violet and pink are my next favorites. Girls often like pink, and boys can too 😊. I love wearing dark shades, even though I appreciate light colors as well. Colors are wonderful and meant to be enjoyed.

I was surprised when people said their favorite color was green 🟢, like my seventh-grade teacher and my cousin Shyam. Recently, Riya said one of her favorite colors is 🟠. I can count the people who prefer other colors, but there are so many who like blue. Here are a few names: Koti Sai, Devi, Vinoth Anna, Nivethi, Nelson, Yazhini, Anu Akka, Kamali, Siva Anna... See, I listed these names in seconds, and I could name even more if I thought about it longer. I'm just stuck wondering why so many people like blue 💙.

If anyone reading this likes blue or has something to share about the color, please comment below 😊.
